Dear Person:

I watched a report on PBS a few nights ago about rBGH. It was a very disturbing report and I decided to not buy milk/beef that has been treated with POSILAC. I'm trying to find which dairy products are free of POSILAC and would like to know if the FDA has any information that might help me.

I understand that there still does not seem to be any proof that this is harmful to humans, but it seems to be very harmful to cows, therefore I believe that there really needs to be more research conducted before it continues to be injected into these animals. I also think that companies who use rBGH or any other type of hormones to increase sales/production should label their product so that consumers can make informed decisions about the products that their families are consuming.

I thank you in advance for any information you can provide.

Sincerely,

Norma R. De Yagcier
